Summary

- s.1 In Verses of Good Fortune, the Buddha responds to a god's question by offering a series of verses praising the supreme qualities of the Three Jewels (Buddha, Dharma, and Saṅgha). Each stanza concludes with "By this truth, may there be good fortune," invoking these profound truths to bring blessings and auspiciousness.

Introduction

- i.1 Verses of Good Fortune is given by the Buddha in answer to a god who asks for a verse he can recite to bring good fortune. The Buddha extols the qualities of the Three Jewels (Buddha, Dharma, and Saṅgha) and mentions how they are more precious than any other jewels found both in this world and in the heavens. Although they be precious and rare, such jewels afford no comparison to the Three Jewels. After each verse of praise, the Buddha declares what he has said is true and that good fortune will result from the reciter's declaring such truths.

- i.2 Verses of Good Fortune belongs to a wider genre of prayers, often recited at the conclusion of rituals, to bring good fortune and invite auspicious outcomes. In Tibet, the prayer has been held in high esteem and its inclusion in many Tibetan ritual and prayer collections indicate that Verses of Good Fortune has been recited as a prayer of auspiciousness in Tibet for many centuries.
- i.3 The colophon in the Degé Kangyur recension does not record the translator’s name. However, according to the Phukdrak and the Hemis Kangyurs, it was translated by Jinamitra and Bandé Yéshé Dé. The text is also listed in both the Phangthangma and Denkarma catalogs of translated texts,¹ indicating that it was translated into Tibetan no later than the early ninth century CE.
- i.4 Because of its widespread use as a prayer of auspiciousness, Verses of Good Fortune is found in more than one location in most Kangyurs. In the Degé Kangyur, it is found in the “dedication-aspiration” collection of texts included at the end of the tantra section (Toh 817) and in the “aspiration” section at the end of the dhāraṇī section (Toh 1101).^{2 3 4} It is also included in the “dedication-aspiration” at the end of the Degé Tengyur (Toh 4400a).
- i.5 This translation was made based on the two versions included in the Degé Kangyur in consultation with the Comparative Edition (dpe bsdur ma), and the Stok, Phukdrak, and Shey Kangyurs.

Verses of Good Fortune

1.1

Homage to the Three Jewels.

1.2

A god approached the Buddha, Made offerings, and asked, “Great Buddha, Great Sage, What should be recited to bring good fortune?”

- 1.3 Upon hearing these words, the Friend of the World responded, “Listen to that which, through constant recitation, Will lead to good fortune like mine.
- 1.4 Whatever great and supreme jewels exist In this world, other worlds, and the higher realms, Compared to the jewel of a perfect buddha, They do not match any count, tally, or fraction.
- 1.5 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of a perfect buddha is supreme in the world!’ Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.6 There is no equal to the Dharma that Śākyamuni realized in blissful equipoise, A sublime ambrosia of peaceful cessation. After it has been achieved, there is no misery.
- 1.7 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of sublime Dharma is supreme in the world!’ Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.8 The eight types of persons spoken of by the Victorious One, They are the four pairs of individuals.⁵ These beings worthy of worship are very rare upon this earth, And offerings made to them yields unfathomable rewards.
- 1.9 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of the Saṅgha is supreme in the world! Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.10 The Blessed One alone knows what is and is not supreme. He is the foremost bestower of supreme sublimity, The source of supreme light, and supreme sublime courage, His is the most sublime of the most sublime knowledges.
- 1.11 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of a perfect Buddha is supreme in the world!’ Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!

- 1.12 The sublime and unobstructed samādhi, Which the Tathāgata of unbounded mind has taught, There is no samādhi equal to that samādhi, Whose stability is exemplified by the vajra.
- 1.13 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of samādhi is supreme in the world!’ Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.14 Just as a door firmly closed and secured with a bar Is not shaken by the four mighty winds, The skilled person, established in seeing the four truths, Is unmoved by proponents of worldly views.
- 1.15 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of the Saṅgha is supreme in the world! Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.16 The Blessed One alone eclipses all, Is all-knowing and all-seeing, Omniscient and omnipotent, most sublime, Free from all fear, and knows the aspirations of all.
- 1.17 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of a perfect Buddha is supreme in the world!’ Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.18 That which arrests cyclic existence, is unmoving, without change, The flawless liberator from all fears, Brings to cessation, excellence, and release,⁶ Is utterly stainless, pacific, and undistracted.
- 1.19 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of sublime Dharma is supreme in the world!’ Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.20 The conscientious who have seen the truths, That reveal great suffering and lead to happiness, Have no doubts about the jewels of the truths, And they shall not take an eighth birth thereafter.

- 1.21 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of the Saṅgha is supreme in the world! Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.22 The most sublime among the sublime, the knower of the sublime, The knower of what is and is not supreme, striver for the ultimate, The one who comprehends and realizes the sublime impervious to others, Is the best friend to those who suffer.
- 1.23 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of a perfect Buddha is supreme in the world!’ Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.24 Engaged in yoga, having roused the aspiration, Always undertaking Gautama’s teachings, liberated and peaceful, They, who are impervious to others’ misdirection, have touched peace. Those who have reached that are beyond count.
- 1.25 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of the Saṅgha is supreme in the world! Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.26 One out of a hundred who have seen the truths may Forget and commit a certain misdeed. However, it would be remiss to call their insight corrupted Because they are established in and do not move from this reality.
- 1.27 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of the Saṅgha is supreme in the world! Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.28 In all of the worlds of gods and humans, The Buddha has no equal or superior. He is the unsurpassed teacher of gods and humans, The supreme teacher, guide, and physician.

- 1.29 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of a perfect Buddha is supreme in the world!’ Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.30 The sublime Dharma that the Sage discovered In the dense forest, in the first month of summer, Has no equal or superior. There are none that amount to this.
- 1.31 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of sublime Dharma is supreme in the world!’ Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!
- 1.32 Those who have exhausted old misdeeds and not committed new ones Are immune to the plague and so free from danger and sorrow. Having arrested the root, they feel no craving And blaze like beacons of the Teachings.
- 1.33 If this unfathomable and amazing marvel That I speak is true— ‘The jewel of the Saṅgha is supreme in the world! Then, by its truth, may there be good fortune!’
- 1.34 This completes the “Verses of Good Fortune.”
